

AN INTRODUCTION TO MIND and the concept of MINDISM

KNOW THYSELF

(requires one to first learn to Understand what Self means)

Everything in the universe is a manifestation of Mind and its inherent activity. This is a fundamental premise of Mindism. The Universe is defined by my 'Chambers 20th Century Dictionary' as, "all that is: the whole system of things: comprehending, affecting, or extending to the whole" (my italics). This definition, when you read it again after having digested the contents of this work, is incredibly accurate.

As you develop an understanding of the Evolution of Mind, you will recognise the part played by "comprehending, affecting and extension". The definition of 'universe' explains existence.

Mindism is a synthesis of the works of great Minds from history. One of the most significant contributors to this work is the German polymath genius Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz 1646-1716. His rationale ascertained that all things arose from First Causes, he defined them as Monads, a word he took from the Greek language. He wrote an official Monadology, his unofficial version stated that the Monad corresponded to, and was synonymous with The Soul.

A cause, by definition, is that by, or through which anything happens and it generates an effect. The effect is a response to the affect of the cause. The relevance of this statement will reveal itself. Comprehending is the foundation of understanding; they are both basic mental activities that manifest as a matter of course from the emanations of (waveform frequencies from) the Soul. According to Leibniz, Monads/Souls emanate all possible frequencies and it is the interaction of these frequencies that give rise to the concepts we define as mind and intelligence, i.e. having intellect: endowed with the faculty of reason. Intellect is defined as 'the mind, in reference to its rational powers'.

That's enough definitions for now.

Mind and Matter

Rene Descartes 1596-1650, was a French philosopher, scientific theorist and mathematician, who gave us the concept of Cartesian Duality. "Cartesian dualism describes the world as being made of two distinct substances: the extended substance which composes the body and the thinking substance which makes up the mind."

The statement accurately associates extension with the physical realm of existence, i.e. matter and measurement. Today, the physical realm is SpaceTime, two concepts intimately intertwined that 'the senses' have evolved to recognise and respond to, in order to maintain the integrity and survival of the living organism. Information from the physical realm is collected from specially developed receptors at the end of neurons that relay that information to the mind of the organism for processing. Decision making is a process based on memory, experience and consideration of potential outcomes. Survival is the name of the game. Most multicellular organisms have some form of nervous system and 'evolution' that has endowed these nerves with specific receptors that respond to particular forms of stimulation. The receptors respond to change, e.g. movement, changes in temperature, pressure or magnetic field variation, molecular 'energy/information' (giving rise to taste and smell) and vibration; all of which can be physically measured. Although Light, by definition has no mass and does not 'experience' Time, it conveys information to the eye by comparing the position of objects that do exist in the physical realm and move through Spacetime. The eye is a truly wondrous organ whose intelligent design appears to stand out more than other organs of the body. That is, until one studies them in depth and the realisation that they are all amazing 'par excellence' and further confirmation that a super hyper mega intelligence has, over the billions, managed to manifest living organisms with a whole bunch of internal organs that are either an act of God or have a most reasonable and rational explanation for their existence.

Defining Mind in Simple Terms

I will describe four major 'divisions' of Mind which I have determined will help the reader get an idea of the complexity and structure of Mind and understand their own personal 'part' and connection with the mind that we have been told is our own. The four divisions I label to enable 'our mind' to understand its relationship to Mind 'itself' are: Conscious Mind, Spirit Mind, Soul Mind and Universal Mind.

For most multicellular organisms, they have a physical body which corresponds to and with, a Spirit Body which is inseparable from its Spirit Mind.

Soul Mind and Universal Mind exist without any corresponding 'living' connection to the physical world. They are in the Mental Realm, a non-dimensional concept, outside of SpaceTime.

Soul Mind manifested Spirit Mind, not in the Mental Realm but in the Zero Point Realm. The zero point field 'separates' the physical realm from the mental realm, its existence is a barrier between mind and matter. The zero point field manifests the zero point realm, (it is The Aether that Einstein allegedly debunked,) which is where Spirit is located. Spirit Mind can be visualised as being associated with a Spirit Body; the Spirit Body corresponds accurately to the physical body and all memories of this incarnation are held in the Spirit Mind and its associated Spirit Body. The expression 'muscles have memory' relates to the memory housed in the Spirit Body, (bear in mind that we use words to build understanding and convey meaning accordingly).

Mindism asserts that everything physical and 'dimensional' emanates and manifests from the 'nondimensional' Mental realm of existence. My work, 'The Evolution of Mind' explains in more detail just how this occurs. In short, intelligence manifests as a result of the hyper complex interrelationships of interacting frequencies emanating from the Monadic Soul 'bodies' (GW Leibnitz, 1646-1716, the monad, he was a genius and major contributor to the concept, philosophy and theology that I refer to as 'Mindism'). Intelligence manifests comprehension, which in turn enables understanding to evolve. There is no evolution of species, only Minds. Comprehension enables 'understanding' to manifest and evolve accordingly.

The 'Mind's Eye' is the ability of Soul Mind to experience and perceive the physical realm. Using information received from the physical realm through the DNA 'transponder' molecules, it built up a 'picture' of the physical environment. Initially this would probably have been predominated by waveform frequencies and subtle energy fields being the information that Mind was receiving and learning to process. Mind could identify with the data within each separate waveform frequency. With time and complexity, images would develop as a mental 'form' corresponding to a physical 'shape'. Eventually it would assign the concept of 'colour' to bands of waveform frequencies.

Conscious Mind is associated with the brain, particularly the pre-frontal cortex which is why the majority of people think that their mind exists inside their head. In my experience, to associate the location of conscious mind as inside the head is a more masculine trait than feminine.

Spirit Mind is associated with the heart chakra, again in my experience, having questioned many people on this matter, it is a more feminine attribute that also is found in more 'sensitive' males.

Spirit Mind is within the Zero Point Realm and it corresponds and communicates with Conscious Mind. Conscious Mind is really the product of the brain/mind interface making decisions in real time. It is an awareness of 'here and now' that animals have and with the human pre-frontal cortex, it manifests 'consciousness' as humans experience it.

Soul Mind can be associated with the area of the body that the Chinese refer to as the Tan Tien, located below the navel. It is not the same location as where gut feelings arise.

Gut feelings are the most primal source of information in multicellular animals. It was necessary for (intelligent) Mind to assess the contents of the primal gut tube that some of the earliest multicellular organisms had. It was necessary to discriminate between the various molecular structures passing through it. Harmful 'energies/non-foods' would have to be recognised and any passive transport across the cell membrane would need to be blocked. Beneficial molecules too large for the naturally occurring osmotic process, (Osmosis), would need to be recognised and actively transported into the organism. Initially, learning this process through trial and error would probably be slow and tedious, however, as we know, Mind was able to apply its immense creative intelligence to these matters. From our own experience of learning, once knowledge is attained it is retained for future use and the Evolution of Mind progresses accordingly. Organisms would evolve and develop according to environmental factors feeding back the information collected for mental processing and decision making.

The modern debate of 'is it the environment or is it the genetics?' is a waste of time if the concept of Mind is not included in the discussion.

JB Lamarck, 1744-1829, proposed a theory of evolution based on information feedback. Those who subsequently supported and projected Darwin into the realms of history had an agenda of their own. Darwin, famous for publishing someone else's Theory of Evolution (AR Wallace), failed entrance to university and so was destined to become a priest but chose to accompany his 'friend' the captain of 'The Beagle' on a voyage to The Americas. He became the ship's doctor by default, when the actual ship's doctor left the ship at the earliest opportunity of it first docking somewhere in the Caribbean, as I recall. Which is not to say that Darwin was not very clever, just limited by his circumstance.

The Scientific Conspiracy, is not the subject of this work, however, this work exists partly to demonstrate that from the mid late 1700's, the concept of Mind was slowly removed from scientific debate and by the late twentieth century, it was 'brain' that was the seat of intelligence and all aspects of behaviour could be controlled by chemical/pharmaceutical intervention. Profit trumped reason, and a couple of interesting and informative short books on this subject are well worth a read, although in truth, one hardly needs to read beyond the introduction and first chapter to know and understand the truth they contain. They are pertinent to today's world climate and unchanging power of politics and money corrupting the Mind of Man.

Mind is the 'field' that develops from the waveform frequencies that emanate from a Soul. Subsequent to the Big Bang, these emerging frequencies eventually form a field around the Monadic Soul. It is dynamic and changing, the change is not random but 'directional' and for a reason. The 'field' evolves following/defining mathematical laws that are universal in nature and manifest the concept of Pure Intelligence.

Most modern physicists recognise that the physical world is one of extension and 'projection' and is not the original cause of the universe. The Big Bang refers to the moment that 'time began', the physical universe was created and 'Spacetime' manifested into existence from 'The Singularity'.

Only our minds can grasp the concepts that form the fabric of reality that we aspire to know. Reality is a form of understanding, the physical realm is purely relative, however, that does not mean that it is not real. The alleged illusion of reality is a play of words, it is a matter of definition. It is real in that the physical realm is real, albeit 'temporary'. Our understanding of the physical realm is primarily through the information that our senses send to the brain for subsequent mental processing. The physical realm is not immortal, its existence lasts for an eon. It is an extension of the mental realm and is created by an act of asymmetry in the Universal Mind which leads to, what we call, the big bang. Conversely, the mental realm is immortal, outside of the spacetime reality that surrounds it. It is totally absolute and is comprised of Monads that emanate every possible waveform frequency. (Leibnitz used the word, monad, he knew it was synonymous with the concept of The Soul, I like to sometimes use the term Monadic Soul).

'The Singularity' can be seen to be a Supersingularity comprised of an infinite number of singularities. A singularity, by definition is outside SpaceTime and cannot be measured by any physical means. Proof of its existence is mental and mathematical. Mathematics is the 'language' of Mind. We 'speak' it without even realising it. A simple example is learning to catch a ball, a somewhat more complex example is learning to drive a car. The decision making is mathematical in its foundation. If this, then that...

The individuated singularity within the Supersingularity corresponds to the Soul. The Supersingularity corresponds to the Universal Soul. We use words here to convey understanding, allow the mind to stay open and it will reveal all. The Soul is on a journey towards Total Enlightenment and is the 'cause' of Purpose, (teleology) and the realisation of a certain end (entelechy).

There are reasons for everything and everything can be explained. Magic is true illusion, everything has an explanation and a reason why it occurs. Words are sounds that have an inherent meaning. Sounds are collections of frequencies that form vibrations in the physical realm, vibrations are physical, not mental, and they are converted to electrical signals in the ear. The signals travel along the neurons (nerves) to the brain and the Mind receives the information through the DNA and 'meaning' is assigned to that sound, (word). Meaning recruits memory and understanding to produce mental building blocks that are used to further develop and increase understanding. Languages develop and evolve over time, new words are formed to describe new concepts, vocabulary increases, understanding increases and consciousness expands. Languages are a manifestation of Mind, everything is a manifestation of Mind.
