

AN INTRODUCTION TO MIND and the concept of MINDISM
October 2021

KNOW THYSELF

I will describe four major 'divisions' of Mind which I have determined will help the reader get an idea of the complexity and structure of Mind and understand their own personal 'part' and connection with the mind that we have been told is our own. The four divisions I label to enable 'our mind' to understand its relationship Mind 'itself' are: Conscious Mind, Spirit Mind, Soul Mind and Universal Mind.

I define them as being relatively separate, in order to visualize their interrelationship and how they manifested in evolutionary terms. For most multicellular organisms, i.e. animals, trees and plants, Conscious Mind and Spirit Mind are one and the same and relate to the physical body, (either cellular or multicellular).

Soul Mind and Universal Mind exist without any corresponding 'living' connection to the physical world. They are in the Mental Realm, a non dimensional concept, outside of SpaceTime.

Soul Mind manifested Spirit Mind, not in the Mental Realm but in the Zero Point Realm. Spirit Mind can be visualized as being associated with a Spirit Body. The Spirit Body corresponds accurately to the physical body and all memories of this incarnation are held in the Spirit Mind and its associated Spirit Body. The expression 'muscles have memory' relates to the memory housed in the Spirit Body, bear in mind that we use words to build understanding and convey meaning accordingly.

Mindism asserts that everything physical and 'dimensional' emanates and manifests from the 'nondimensional' realm of existence. My work, 'The Evolution of Mind' explains in more detail just how this occurs. In short, intelligence manifests as a result of the hyper complex interrelationships of interacting frequencies emanating from the Monadic Soul 'bodies' (GW Leibnitz, 1646-1716, a genius and major contributor to the concept, philosophy and theology that I refer to as 'Mindism'). Intelligence manifests comprehension, which in turn enables understanding to evolve. There is no evolution of species only Minds and 'understanding' evolve.

The 'Mind's Eye' is the ability of Soul Mind to perceive the physical realm. Using information received from the physical realm through the DNA 'transformer' molecules, it built up a 'picture' of the physical environment. Initially this would probably have been predominated by waveform frequencies and the Mind's understanding of the data inherent in the frequency. With time and complexity, images would develop as a mental 'form' corresponding to a physical 'shape'.

Conscious Mind is associated with the brain, particularly the pre-frontal cortex which is why the majority of people think that their mind exists inside their head. In my experience, it is a more masculine trait than feminine, to associate the location of conscious mind as inside the head. .

Spirit Mind is associated with the heart chakra, again in my experience, having questioned many people on this matter, it is a more feminine attribute that also is found in more 'sensitive' males. Spirit Mind is within the zero point realm and corresponds with conscious mind which is really the product of cortex

(the outer layer of the brain). It is the awareness of 'here and now' that animals have and with the human pre-frontal cortex, it manifests 'consciousness'.

Soul Mind is associated with what the Chinese refer to as the Tan Tien, located below the navel. It is not the same location as where gut feelings arise.

Gut feelings are the most primal source of information in multicellular animals. It was necessary for (intelligent) Mind to assess the contents of the primal gut tube that some of the earliest multicellular organisms had. It was necessary to discriminate between the various molecular structures passing through it. Harmful 'energies/non-foods' would have to be recognized and transport across the cell membrane would need to be blocked. Beneficial molecules too large for the naturally occurring osmotic process would need to be recognized and actively transported into the organism. Initially, learning this process through trial and error would probably be slow and tedious, however, as we know from our own experience of learning, once the knowledge is attained it is retained for future use and the evolution of Mind and its physical counterparts, i.e. organisms would evolve and develop according to environmental factors and the mental processing of the information obtained from the environment.

The modern debate of 'is it the environment or is it the genetics' is a waste of time if the concept of Mind is not included in the discussion. JB Lamarck, 1744-1829, proposed a theory of evolution based on information feedback. Those who subsequently supported and projected Darwin into the realms of history were part of a scientific conspiracy to pervert Truth and ensure the ruling class maintained their control over humanity. Darwin, famous for publishing someone else's Theory of Evolution (AR Wallace), failed entrance to university and so was destined to become a priest but chose to accompany his 'friend' the captain of 'The Beagle' on a voyage to The Americas. He became the ship's doctor by default, when the actual ship's doctor left the ship at the earliest opportunity of it first docking somewhere in the Caribbean, as I recall.

The Scientific Conspiracy, is not the subject of this work, however, this work exists to demonstrate that from the mid late 1700's, the concept of Mind was slowly removed from scientific debate and by the early twentieth century it was 'brain' that was the seat of intelligence and all aspects of behaviour could be controlled by chemical/pharmaceutical intervention. Profit trumped reason and a couple of interesting and informative short books on this subject are well worth a read, although in truth, one hardly needs to read beyond the introduction and first chapter to know and understand the truth they contain. They are pertinent to today's world climate and unchanging power of politics and money corrupting the Mind of Man.

Bechamp or Pasteur? by Ethel Hume 1942 and the Vaccine Watchman by WD Stokes 1886 both fascinating reading.

Mind is the 'field' that emanates from a Soul subsequent to the moment of the Big Bang. It is dynamic and changing, the change is not random but 'directional' and for a reason. The 'field' evolves manifesting mathematical laws that are pure intelligence.

Most modern physicists recognize that the physical world is one of extension and 'projection' and is not the original cause of the universe. The Big Bang refers to the moment 'time began' and SpaceTime manifested into existence from 'The Singularity'. Only our minds can grasp the concepts that form the fabric of reality that we aspire to know. Reality is a form of understanding, the physical realm is purely relative, the mental realm is totally absolute.

'The Singularity' can be seen to be a Supersingularity comprised of an infinite number of singularities. A singularity, by definition is outside SpaceTime and cannot be measured by any physical means. Proof of its existence is mental and mathematical. Mathematics is the language of Mind as explained in my work, 'The Evolution of Mind'.

The individuated singularity within the Supersingularity corresponds to the Soul. The Supersingularity corresponds to the Universal Soul. We use words here to convey understanding, allow the mind to stay open and it will reveal all. The Soul is on a journey towards Total Enlightenment and is the cause of Purpose, (teleology) and realization of a certain end (entelechy).

There are reasons for everything and everything can be explained. Words are sounds that have an inherent meaning and the meaning is defined by the regional language learned. Languages develop and evolve over time, they are a manifestation of Mind and its inherent mental activity.

Everything in the universe is a manifestation of Mind and its inherent activity. This is a fundamental premise of Mindism. The Universe is defined by my Chambers 20th Century Dictionary as, all that is: the whole system of things: comprehending, affecting, or extending to the whole. This definition, when you read it again after having digested the contents of this work, is incredibly accurate.

As you develop an understanding of the Evolution of Mind, you will recognize the part played by comprehending, affecting and extension. (it was not my intention to start writing on this theme, however, having looked up the definition of 'universe' I was impressed by how, to the point and all encompassing the explanation was). It explains existence.

Mindism is a synthesis of the works of great Minds from history. One of the most significant contributors to this work is the German polymath genius Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz 1646-1716. His rationale ascertained that all things arose from First Causes, he defined them as Monads, a word he took from the Greek language. He wrote an official Monadology, his unofficial version stated that the Monad corresponded to The Soul.

A cause, by definition, is that by or through which anything happens and it generates an effect. The effect is a response to the affect of the cause. The relevance of this statement will reveal itself. Comprehending is the foundation of understanding, they are both basic mental activities that manifest as a matter of course from the emanations of the Soul. According to Leibnitz, Monads/Souls emanate all possible frequencies and it is the interaction of these frequencies that give rise to the concept we define as intelligence, i.e. having intellect: endowed with the faculty of reason. Intellect is defined as 'the mind, in reference to its rational powers.

That's enough definitions.

Mind and Matter

Rene Descartes 1596-1650, was a French philosopher, scientific theorist and mathematician, who gave us the concept of Cartesian Duality. "Cartesian dualism describes the world as being made of two distinct substances: the extended substance which composes the body and the thinking substance which makes up the mind."

The statement accurately associates extension with the physical realm of existence, i.e. matter and measurement. Today, the physical realm is SpaceTime, two concepts interminably intertwined that 'the senses' have evolved to recognize and respond to, in order to maintain the integrity and survival of the living organism. Information from the physical realm is collected from specially developed receptors that relay that information to the mind of the organism for processing. Decision making is a process based on memory, experience and consideration of potential outcomes. Survival is the name of the game. Most multicellular organisms have some form of nervous system and 'evolution' has endowed these nerves with specific receptors that respond to particular forms of stimulation. The receptors respond to change, e.g. movement, changes in temperature, pressure or magnetic field variation, molecular 'energy' (giving rise to taste and smell) and vibration, things that can be physically measured. Although Light, by definition has no mass and does not 'experience' Time, it conveys information to the eye by comparing the position of objects that do exist and move through Spacetime. The eye is a truly wondrous organ whose intelligent design appears to stand out more than other organs of the body until one studies them in depth and the realization that they are all amazing 'par excellence' and further confirmation that a super hypo mega intelligence has, over the billenia, managed to manifest living organisms that are either an act of God or have a most reasonable and rational explanation for their existence.
